It gives us great pleasure to announce the publication of the first issue of the Journal of Libyan Surgical Society (JLSS). It makes us even more excited to have you as authors, reviewers, and readers on board. The Libyan Surgeons Society's official publication is this new open access, peer-reviewed journal. It serves as a venue for the publication of original research papers, reviews, short communications, case reports, and editorials on topics related to surgical research and clinical practice.

The Libyan Society of Surgeons (LSS) envisions this Journal as a place where all surgeons and researchers from Libya and around the world can contribute scientific data and reports in all aspects of surgical research. We are well aware of the duties that the editor's position implies, and we are eager to take on this new challenge. By selecting high-quality articles, we hope to improve the readability and visibility of JLSS in the international research community.

Peer review is still an important part of how we evaluate submitted manuscripts. We've put together a renowned group of Editorial Board Members who will ensure timely evaluation of all submissions and uphold the highest standards of quality and scientific rigor, while allowing studies from either community to be published equally. Other goals of interest include shortening the period between acceptance and publication, as well as improving the Journal's rating.

We also encourage you to take advantage of the free submission and publication process, as well as the resources provided by Open Journal Systems (OJS) - Public Knowledge Project to help you enrich your papers, such as the plagiarism and references checkers. We anticipate that JLSS will become one of the most prestigious surgical journals, and we eagerly await your research contributions.
